

BRIDE Vibes

Wedding season is in full swing, so browse through Scratch's selection of nuptial nail styles to perfectly complement your bridal client's dress

BY REBECCA HITCHON

Pure Nails educator, Nicole Dowling, opted for beautiful lace detailing on this bride's nail enhancements to match her dress.

While the wedding industry revolves around love, the past two years have seen it dominated by heartbreak. But after countless cancellations and delays due to the pandemic, wedding season is underway – and appointment books are filling up fast.

The dress may be what brides-to-be ponder over most, but what is a bridal look without the perfect nail style to match? After all, countless photos will be taken of the ring – so the hands and nails will be getting plenty of attention.

"Ask a lot of questions during the consultation," advises Sophie Elizondo-Darwin, INK London educator. "Ask the bride if she is seeking a natural look, what her colour scheme is for the big day and which nail style and products she usually chooses, and find out what her dress is like. It is also crucial to get a list of dates, such as the hen party, wedding and honeymoon, so you know how long the nails are required to be worn, or for how long they will be worn before the wedding. This allows you to advise on appropriate aftercare products."

A thorough consultation also allows you to determine which service plans or tailored packages are best to achieve the bride's nail goal, explains Laura Chree, Louella Belle brand ambassador. "Consider whether the client needs to go to natural nail rehab and book regular manicures, or would suit enhancements if she is struggling to grow her nails," she comments.

Take a look at nail styles and products to suit six bridal styles, with top tips for nailing the looks and enhancing your bridal services along the way...

"I was a bride six years ago and know that trends change quickly. However, a French or neutral nail style stands the test of time," says Jessica Prout, Georgie Smedley Group ambassador. "They are classic and timeless looks that allow the focus to stay on the wedding ring in photos."

Salon System nail expert, Jaz Moger, agrees. "The classic French mani isn't going anywhere and the micro-French on short natural nails is always a hit with brides. Builder gel bases in sheer pinks or nudes with a skinny white or ivory tip and perfect cuticle prep is a must-have for lots of brides who require long wear," she comments.

Building bridal packages

Bridal and bridal party packages introduce new and existing clients to more of your treatments, in turn increasing your profit margins.

Carla Mitchell

"You can add services like waxing, tinting or lashes to your bridal packages, or tailor them to a bridal party so that the bridesmaids and mothers of the bride and groom can have their nails done," explains Nailchemy brand ambassador, Carla Mitchell.

"A more unique upsell would be to offer the groomsmen manicures, as the groom's hands usually feature in close-up wedding shots," she continues. Jaz Moger agrees, adding: "There's nothing worse than a close-up wedding ring shot of the groom's overgrown cuticles!"

Julie-Anne Larivière

"Customisable bridal packages are a good way to open up to the bridal market," comments Julie-Anne Larivière, Salon System nail expert. "Offer interchangeable options so the bride and her party don't feel pressured into booking in for services they may not need or want."

Layla Tourh

"Some of the services a bride will have booked in for will require a safe, professional removal, so why not offer a post-wedding appointment in your package?" notes Layla Tourh, founder of Beauty Boss HQ, an online platform dedicated to supporting beauty bosses in the running of their business. "Maybe the client is undecided on whether they want to continue having lash extensions, for example, so this extra appointment is helpful and can encourage them to return as a regular client."

Giorgia Capella

"I also think it's a nice touch to offer your clients some bubbly in their treatment package, making the experience different to a normal nail appointment," adds Giorgia Capella, The GelBottle Inc educator and brand ambassador. "Posting images of your bridal set-up, for example photos of your pedi station with a glass of Champagne, will encourage new customers who want a full bridal experience!"

Helen Clayton

TOP TIP
"Ask brides if they can send professional shots taken on the wedding day to use for your marketing, with permission from the photographer," recommends Helen Clayton, Nailchemy brand ambassador.

Market in the right places

1. Bridal shows. "These are a great way to explain to potential clients what you can do for them, so perhaps offer mini manicures or hand hydration treatments and show examples of your work in pictures and on nail pops," recommends Laura Chree.

2. Wedding venues & shops.

"Reach out to local wedding venues, such as hotels and bridal shops and ask to leave some of your business cards and price lists," advises Amy Martin. Georgie Smedley Group educator. "This means you can be put on their recommended lists, allowing you to tap into the bridal market and gain clients," adds Georgie Capella.

3. Social media groups. "Gather your best bridal nail images in a gallery and use this to advertise your business on local bridal groups, offering a small discount to members if they book before a certain date," suggests Julie-Anne Larivière.

4. Publications. "You could get in touch with bridal magazines to see if they will publish your work and help you reach a wider audience," says Niamh Hartley, Halo VIP.

Team up

"You could collaborate with a local make-up artist and hairdresser to offer a package, which is a great incentive for bridal clients as it means that everything they need is booked under one bundle," recommends Amy Martin.

Julie-Anne Larivière says that networking with other bridal services can be hugely beneficial. "If you build a good relationship with those businesses, they will likely recommend you to their customers and vice versa," she says.

This can also allow you to benefit from their services, as Carla Mitchell explains. "If you know any budding photographers or wedding photographers, offering to do a collaboration can provide you with great photos, for example student photographers might be happy to work with you for a small fee," she comments.

"With online collaboration tools, you can also massively increase your visibility," adds Layla Tourh. "The new collaboration tool on Instagram allows you to have two authors for one piece of content, which means if you were to do this with a fellow wedding specialist, both accounts would get brides viewing the content and potentially following each account."

Bridal henna

Pavan Ahluwalia-Dhanjal

While henna is a tradition of Indian wedding celebrations, Pavan Ahluwalia-Dhanjal BEM has put the London henna bar she founded, Pavan Henna Bar, on the map by bringing henna into the mainstream, making it accessible for all and creating her own product range.

"Bridal henna kick-started my henna business," she smiles. "I have been offering bridal henna as a service for 20 years now, and it has transcended into an essential beauty offering, which is ever evolving. Bridal henna symbolises health, wealth, luck, prosperity – all the good stuff!"

Pavan is on a mission to educate beauty therapists about creating henna art. "My business offers training for therapists and an educator programme, where therapists can hold their own training classes. We ensure that you are educated in the background as well as the practical and theory of all things henna, which opens up a whole new world of service and revenue," she reveals. Find out more here

Complement bridal henna with Glitterbels Acrylic Powder in Wifey £8.95 inc VAT www.glitterbels.com

While important that bridal henna and nails complement each other for the most dynamic look, Pavan admits that any nail colour looks great with henna. "Brides tend to go for traditional red, but whether you go for a nude look so the henna stands out more or a bold colour to make a statement, either one would look great paired with a trending henna design," she says.
